

THE COMING MODE IN FUR GARMENTS

The distended tunic makes a full, baggy wrap necessary, and many gracefully draped cloaks have been created to fill this requirement. This handsome three-quarter coat of beautifully marked broadtail is trimmed with seal.

The huge batwing sleeves of this chinchilla wrap are incorporated in the draped folds of the garment. The collar is a modish feature, and the wrap fastens down one side with chinchilla buttons.

Long, flowing sleeves which form part of the back are the particular feature of this mole wrap. The draped muff of mole is trimmed with ermine tails.
